THE VERDICT OF THE PRESS.

What Leading Newspapers Say About Mrs. Tilton's Confession.

Philadelphia Times.

This reopening of the case does not seem to call for any special comment. It is a case of a woman determined to convince the world of her wife's dishonor, but the world has long since formed an opinion of Mr. Theodore Tilton, Beecher, and we doubt whether they would accept a death-bed confession to the same effect from the Plymouth Church pastor himself. The moral status of the affair is not the business of the public, but it is the business of the press. So let this letter be a contribution to the other archives of this "celebrated case," there to rest until time shall efface its condemning lines.

Chicago Times.

It is not likely that this confession will surprise or be disbelieved by many persons in or out of the immediate circle of Mr. Beecher's admirers. The nature of the testimony taken during the trial, and all the circumstances of the case, left little chance for unprejudiced persons to doubt the truth of Tilton's charge. The impression created upon the public mind, outside of the peculiar influence of Mr. Beecher and the powerful semi-religious organization which surrounded and supported him, was that in the many trying and thrilling scenes of the ordeal in court, he had fully maintained his reputation as a great actor, and his friends accepted of his story. Whatever the result of this confession, it will not be a surprise to those who have followed the trial with interest. The confession is a confession of a woman, which, as we have said, is not the business of the public. It is a confession of a woman, which, as we have said, is not the business of the public. It is a confession of a woman, which, as we have said, is not the business of the public.

New York Tribune.

Mr. Beecher had made enough admissions to damn a dozen other preachers; yet a jury could not convict and a confession would not abandon him. Theodore Tilton had compromised himself by writing in terms of affection to the man whom he accused of outraging his domestic sanctuary; yet thousands believed him. Thus there is a possibility that the letter published this morning, will revive it into a scandal, somewhat overstrained in language, and apocryphal in general tone, but in one particular at least it is the work of a sincere man. Whatever the result of this confession, it will not be a surprise to those who have followed the trial with interest. The confession is a confession of a woman, which, as we have said, is not the business of the public. It is a confession of a woman, which, as we have said, is not the business of the public. It is a confession of a woman, which, as we have said, is not the business of the public.

New York Tribune.

As for the verdict of History. The Republican since considered that settled. Not Elizabeth Tilton, nor Theodore, nor Frank Moulton, but his own pen has written Henry Ward Beecher guilty. We do not shrink from the fact that he is not being punished for his crime. The great guilt that separates the Beecher of 1878 from the Beecher of half a dozen years ago is seen and felt by no man more plainly than himself. The cloud under which a once great name goes down to posterity looks blacker to nobody else than the man whom it is enveloping. In the pulpit of confiding Plymouth church, or before the most brilliant audience in the lecture room, Henry Ward Beecher is a man whose lot the humblest laborer in the land that has lived an honest life has no reason to envy.

New York Tribune.

Mrs. Tilton's latest confession will probably not abate one jot of the attachment with which Mr. Beecher's friends have clung to him, and their implicit faith in his innocence is likely to stand a much ruder test than that which has hardly failed to deepen the indignation with which those convinced of Beecher's guilt regard the spectacle of the gospel of truth and purity being expounded by one who has so flagrantly defied its precepts. We are not for other reason than the influence which this ever-recurring scandal has upon the moral tone of society, or the insidious poison which it carries into the minds of youth, the individual who is its source and centre must sustain in the sight of God and man an awful responsibility.

New York Tribune.

It became known a week or two since that Mrs. Tilton had consented to be dependent on her husband for future support, and perhaps this confession is the condition on which it is granted. It is improbable that she wrote this letter without supposing that it would be acceptable to him, and, after putting her name under his protection, she can hardly have taken such a step except as an act of obedience. But what are we to think of a man who could extort so terrible and so humiliating a confession? If all his confessions are true, why should he honor his children by causing their mothers to confess that he is unworthy of respect? Why should he degrade himself by publishing his own shame? It is not difficult to understand how a desolate and forsaken woman, crushed by much suffering, should be brought to this last resort of humiliation, but how could any creature wearing the form of a man find it in his heart to force this tortured wife to make such a statement and permit it to be given to the public? If he is to live with her again, this horrible secret should have been kept between the two and the public be left to its own conjectures. Regarding this confession as genuine, we imagine nothing viler than the act of wringing it from the heart of a prostrate and broken woman by a man who still intends to live with her as his wife.

New York Tribune.

We publish in to-day's Sun a brief but complete confession of Elizabeth Tilton of her guilt with Henry Ward Beecher. This confession fully justifies the wisdom of Beecher's counsel in the scandal trial in taking out of the world the name of Tilton to testify in court at that time. There is no doubt that that would have broken down in the cross-examination, and confessed the truth before she got through. The statement she now makes is undoubtedly true, and with all the evidence in the case, and furnishes the only satisfactory explanation for the otherwise marvelous and mysterious expressions of Beecher's letters. As a matter of positive testimony its value is of course diminished by the fact that Mrs. Tilton has before testified to her own guilt in this subject, but no intelligent person can examine the whole case without coming to the conclusion that Henry Ward Beecher is an adulterer, perjurer and fraud, and his great genius and his Christian pretense make his sin the more horrible and revolting.

New York Tribune.

Now comes Mrs. Tilton, who has so solemnly and times without number, in the presence of God and man, affirmed her innocence of the charge of adultery committed by herself and Mr. Beecher, and in a public letter to the charge was true, and the lie has become intolerable. Man's ingenuity could not add to the solemnity and decision of Mr. Beecher's denial of the alleged crime. It was well known long ago that Mrs. Tilton at one time did acknowledge adultery, and Mr. Beecher's friends insisted that it was a delusion of illness. Having heard and known all that was to be known on the subject, Mr. Tilton became reconciled to Mr. Beecher, and addressed him the most endearing words of their long friendship. The well-known case of the respectable dentist in Philadelphia, imprisoned upon a charge of indecent assault brought upon oath by a patient, a lady of high character, and afterward released as innocent with the approval of the entire community, will be quoted again, and the whole number of the case, and the story and quarrel will commence again. From the Boston Post.

Her letter will tend to reopen the disgusting controversy, and it will bring no moral compensation to those who still hold Mr. Theodore Tilton, Beecher, and we doubt whether they would accept a death-bed confession to the same effect from the Plymouth Church pastor himself. The Ohio Fruit Crop. A thorough investigation as to our prospective fruit crop in and near the city of Toledo, substantiates the previous announcement from various localities in Michigan and the neighboring counties that peaches have been left intact by the late frosts in March, and that a very fair crop of nearly all the early varieties may be looked for.—barren, of course, unfertilized, and promising little, as the varieties are covered with pregnant buds. Pear buds of some of the early varieties seem to have suffered somewhat from the late frost, but only on the extremities of the branches; a fair crop of these may be expected. No damage has occurred to apples or quince trees, and judicious treatment of the latter will reward the grower by a bountiful crop. Grapes, currants and raspberries are well covered with fruit buds.

What is Beauty?

This question has alike puzzled the lover and the philosopher. The sage analyzes it into perfection of feature and coloring, and the lover, looking into the beauty of his adoring mistress, declares that true beauty pertains rather to the imperishable soul than to the ever-changing body. But the physician knows that the chief element of beauty is health. Health is to beauty what the sun is to the rainbow, and the rainbow is to the sun. Beauty without health is a shadow without a body. Woman cannot possess this subtle attractive power of beauty while suffering from those chronic ailments and weaknesses that continually exhaust the springs of her vitality. Dr. Pierce's celebrated Female Prescription, has been used by thousands of these suffering, restoring to them health, strength and beauty.
